

In 1993, The Children's Partnership set out to help invent a future where all children would have access to all the health care they need, and wouldn't have to go to an emergency room to treat a simple ear infection; where the vast benefits of the Internet and computing devices would reach even the most disadvantaged child; and where parents, regardless of education or income, could learn to guide their children productively and safely on the Internet. Below is a sample of our recent work:
